PARKE CHURCH PARSONAGE

1896-1911

PARKTON

PRIVATE

This large parsonage was built as a private home on the lot south of the church which now owns it. However it was built by Dr. Robert R. Norris sometime after the 1896 tax ledger was prepared, because at that time, Dr. Norris only had a small office and a stable on the property. A large vernacular style dwelling had appeared by the time of the 1911 tax list, and it passed to J. Wesley (or J. Wiley) Norris. Some time between 1918 and 1923, the property passed to the Monkton M.E. Church (but not to the congregation next-door). Then in 1941, both of Parkton's Methodist bodies were merged and only the Parke Memorial Church and the parsonage continued in use. This is a plain house with some cross-gables, but not Victorian. There is a wrap-around porch and an L-shaped layout. There is a bay window, and there is fish-scale shingle infilling on the pediments. Roofing is gabled, standing-seam aluminum. Outer wall covering is white composition shingle.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Parke Church Parsonage is a very large, cross-gabled vernacular, 2½-story, frame house with little decoration. The main block presents its gable end to the street and is two bays wide, with double-hung sash windows of 1-over-1 format (similar to all the other windows).

The main entrance is in the southern (or left-handed) bay, a paneled door, topped by a rectangular transom and flanked by sidelights. There are two small gable windows in the pediment, 1-over-1 double-hung sash types. A wraparound porch with its wooden deck six steps above grade crosses the full width of the house and extends around the southside of the structure until it encounters the short-leg of the "L" or wing. The porch is railed with solid panels. Ten posts, two of them recessed at the rear corners of the porch, support the shed roofing. The posts are a mixture of round and square cross-sections over their length. Wooden lattice panels close off the spaces between the porch deck and the brick piers that support the posts.

Facing the southern part of the porch are one window (set in the south facade) and a second door with an overhead transom; this door faces the street and leads directly into the rear wing of the "L."

A gable-roofed, overhanging bay with two full-sized windows projects over the porch. The window nearest the street is directly under a pediment with fish-scale shingling.

The south end of the "L" is two bays, with a total of four full-scale windows, and two smaller 1-over-1 double-hung as sash windows in the pediment; the pediment is filled in with fish-scale shingling.

The rear facade is three bays wide; the rear walls of the main block and the L or south wing form one surface. Two double-hung sash windows are found in the pediment of the main block, again surrounded by fish-scale shingles. At second-story level are three typical windows, the center one probably for a bathroom, being smaller than the others. At first-story level, only the southernmost (right-hand) bay is unobstructed, and contains a typical sash window. Two other bays are hidden by a one-story shed-roofed pantry wing, which is fenestrated with: (1) a 1-over-1 sash window, (2) a door with glass lights and transom, and (3) a sun porch with 30 square lights on the west or rear of the house, 25 lights on the south.

The northside is four bays deep, all positions supplied with 1-over-1 windows, except for a small metal framed kitchen window.

The entire house is covered with white composition shingles. Roofing is standing-seam aluminum. There is an inside end-chimney at the south end of the L, another chimney rises through the roof ridge of the main block, aligned with the second bay from the street.

Foundation is stone, punctuated under the south wing by rectangular cellar windows of two lights each.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The spacious house used as a parsonage by two Methodist congregations was originally a private home. This property is on the high ground north of the railroad stop at Parkton and is composed of lots 15 and 16 on a plat filed in the deeds (rather than the plat books) in 1887. (1)

Mrs. Margaret Emack, heir to the vast Castle Clader properties of The Calder-Turner families laid out these lots, and they were promptly purchased, also in 1888, by Dr. Robert R. Norris, who had a number of relatives next door, by the time all the lots were sold. The lots ran west from the York Turnpike Road to a new street, Calder Avenue. (2)

The 1896 tax ledger shows that in the eight years since his purchase, Dr. R. R. Norris had not built a large dwelling:

1/4 of an acre of land on West side of York Turnpike	30.00
Office	75.00
Stable	200.00
1-3/4 acres on West side of York Turnpike @ $75	131.25
2 horses @ $50 ⁰⁰	100.00
1 @ $20 ⁰⁰	20.00
Two Buggies & Harness	60.00
Office Furniture	30.00
Total	656.25 (3)

The 1911 tax ledger showed that Dr. R. R. Norris had a dwelling worth $1400, and a correction made in 1915 showed that ownership had passed to J. Wesley Norris. (4) The second Norris was also owner of "Barn and Out Bldgs" worth $200. Bromley's 1915 atlas seemed to show that all the lots between Parke Memorial Church and the corner of Calder Avenue and York Road were occupied by housing. (5)

The 1918 tax ledger charged the house to J. Wiley Norris and described it as

1 Lot on York Road in Parkton adj M. P. Church
N. @	$175.00
Dwelling 16 x 34 2 stories	1344.00
2 Outbldgs	300.00 (6)

However, a note in the same 1918 assessment ledger stated "Abate--owned by Parkton M. E. Church."

How the house was transferred to the church body is not clear, because the present tax maps have no clues as to the deed number of the parcel, and the usual search of deed indexes fails to show a recordation from Norris to the church.

The house became a parsonage, not for the church immediately next door, but for the Methodist Episcopal Church on the east side of York Road between the fringe of north Parkton and Dairy-Stablersville Road. The 1915 Bromley atlas showed both churches in Parkton as the M. E. churches, but the Parke Church next to Dr. Norris' house should have been distinguished as M. P. for Methodist Protestant.

The two church bodies were merged in 1941. (7) The M. E. parsonage then became the home of the minister serving the combined congregations; the Parke Church pastor had previously lived in Maryland Line. The Rev. Robert H. Parker was the first minister after the unification.

The parish history relates that in June 1974, the minister assigned to the church owned his own home, and the parsonage was rented:

The parsonage, left vacant, was rented to a family who, unfortunately, proved to be both dishonest and destructive. When they were evicted, a complete renovation of the house was needed. (8)

Miss Emily R. Stiffler, a lifelong member of Parke Church, recalled in 1980 that Dr. R. R. Norris had never used the large house himself. He had the Hawkins family take care of it in exchange for free rent. The doctor lived in the back in the small office structure. That miniature building was later moved a few blocks northward to what had been the Hendrix House (BA 1987), where it survives. (9)

As to Parkton's surplus church, it was sold in 1936 to nearby farmer and landowner Philip C. Turner. (10) Turner used the basement for a barn, and the city papers made sport of the situation:

Cows go to church at Parkton, Md. Moreover, they go every day. For the old Parkton Methodist Episcopal Church, abandoned several years ago, has recently been turned into a barn. Philip C. Turner, president of the Farm Bureau of Baltimore County, and owner of the property, put some stalls in the basement and used the main floor of the church as a haymow.

Several pews remain. The stained glass windows have been demolished by stones thrown by small boys. In the winter the cattle keep warm by the old furnace of the church. Calves are placed there throughout the year. (11)
